Indianapolis, March 22, 1862.

For the Daily State Sentinel. MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the 10th inst. appears the following account of an affray between myself and H. Wall:

"McCabe struck Mr. Wall, who retreated, going from behind his counter into his kitchen. Here McCabe followed, and being a stout and desperate man, kicked the cook and struck Mrs. Wall a severe blow on the shoulder. This was more than Mr. Wall could stand, and knowing his man, seized a butcherknife, the first imple ment lying near, and defended himself and his wife and his own household." Now, Mr. Editor, I have been disagreeably mistaken in the Sentinel to give publicity to such an atrocious falsehood without inquiring into the facts a little further. The direct contrary is the truth, as will be shown on the day of trial. I never raised my hand to strike the man in question, or his wife, or any one in the house. I merely demanded my wages, with the intention of quitting, when Wall ordered me out, and I not complying, he went up stars and came down with his pistol. I then caught hold of him, with the intention of wresting the pistol from him. when he used the butcher knite. The idea of me being a large and desperate man will be amusing to those who know me. I never had a quarrel in Indianapolis before this, and, as regards my size, the author of the above can have a good peep at me on the day of trial. Whether Wall is a des perate man or not. I will leave others to judge what a man would not be guilty of who attempt-JOHN MCCABE. ed to shoot his wife.
